LANGUAGES

Towards 250 Years of Modern Languages at Third Level

28 November 2025

Ireland has one of the longest traditions of modern language teaching at university in the world, thanks to the first positions in French, German, Italian and Spanish being established in Trinity College Dublin in 1776. By 2026, Ireland will be celebrating 250 years of modern languages at third level. This year, the third and penultimate event of a series of conferences which started in 2023 is to be held on November 2025 in Mary Immaculate College and the University of Limerick. Join and listen to the keynote by Patrick O'Donovan, TD and Minister for Arts, Culture, Communications, Media and Sport and panel discussions on multilingualism and modern languages teaching. With the participation of the Swiss Ambassador. Programme
